United Nations celebrates half century

Members agree on need for U.N. reform

The Washington Post

UNITED NATIONS—The United Nations' 50th anniversary celebration ended Tuesday night amid general agreement that the world body needs reforms to adapt it to post-Cold War realities and cash infusions to avert bankruptcy.

There was no doubt about that consensus by the time today's 96 speakers, addressing increasingly empty seats in the cavernous General Assembly chamber, ticked down to the final speech by Roberto Herrera Caceres, secretary general of the obscure Central American Integration System.

But when it came to specifying what the reforms should be or how the financial crisis could be solved, the presidents, prime ministers and others who spoke here over the past three days, in the largest assemblage of world leaders ever, offered differing and frequently contradictory proposals about what the United Nations must do to survive.

On the financial side, the members, seemingly without exception, fixed the principal blame on the United States for its continuing failure to pay its arrears of $1.3 billion in budget dues and peacekeeping assessments. That is more than a third of the roughly $3 billion owed to the United Nations.

However, no one had any workable way to make the United States pay up at a time when the Republican-controlled Congress views U.N. appropriations as a prime target for cost cutting and is increasingly influenced by conservatives who think the body is the linchpin of a conspiracy to undermine U.S. sovereignty.

Even President Clinton, whose Sunday speech opened the celebration, could say only that he is "working" with Congress to seek a solution. That was widely interpreted here as an embarrassed admission that Clinton has failed to

Castro's U.S. visit draws SIUC reaction

By Cynthia Sheets

Fidel Castro was granted a visa and allowed to speak at the United Nations' 50th anniversary celebration, but local reaction to Washington politics differ on how the United States has and should handle him in further negotiations.

Bill Garner, an SIUC associate professor in political science, said it is ridiculous that Castro, the communist leader of Cuba, has been denied entrance into the United States before the United Nations' celebration.

USG seeks voice on University budget cuts

By Wendy J. Allyn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC Undergraduate Student Government will join the Graduate and Professional Student Council's effort to influence academic department budget cuts if a resolution requesting student representation on University budget committees is approved tonight.

GPSC passed a similar resolution last week, which stated that because students are affected by University budget decisions, they deserve to be part of the decision-making process. That process will include determining where each college will take its share of the total $1.3 million in cuts, a result of decreased enrollment and state funding.

USG President Duane Sherman said the senate will work with GPSC to ensure the University's quality of education for students is minimally affected by the cuts.

"It's kind of a joint resolution. We both want representation on the same committees," Sherman said. "Once we have the backing of the senate, (GPSC President William Karrow) and I will probably make a presentation at the next dean's council meeting."

Mark Terry, GPSC vice president for graduate school affairs, said the council is already in the early stages of attempting to gain administrative cooperation. The resolution will be presented to SIUC President John Guyon, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Provost Benjamin Shepherd and the dean's council, Terry said. He said he is optimistic administrators will comply with GPSC's request.

"I'm very confident about it. I think we'll get support from President Guyon and Dean Shepherd," Terry said. "This is a reasonable request and I think the deans will take this to heart."

Guyon said USG and GPSC

Saluki volunteers help community

By Dustin Coleman
DE Features Editor

In the past three years, SIUC student Maxine Hill has helped clean up Carbondale, assisted in raising money for Jerry's kids, worked side by side with area teachers in the classroom and danced with inmates at the Harrisburg Correctional Facility; all of which she volunteered to do without pay.

"It's really fulfilling to get out into the community and meet people," she said. "It is even more fulfilling to help those in the community that need help."

Hill, along with approximately 3,000 other SIUC students, spends time each semester volunteering for community activities in the area through the Saluki Volunteer Corps.

INDIA ANXIOUS AS TOTAL ECLIPSE DARKENS SKY—

NEW DELHI, India—It was only 8:15 a.m., but the sky was darkening and birds were winging back to their nests. Elderly Hindu priest Soosal hurried to light the sacred fire. Within minutes, the priest and a circle of fellow Brahmins had a roaring fire going in the indoor hearth at New Delhi's Birla Temple and, to the drone of divine chants, were tossing handfuls of roots, herbs, nuts, rice, sugar, coconut, dried fruits and millet into the crackling flames to restore the natural order of things. On Tuesday morning, a total eclipse of the sun sent the moon's shadow racing across 8,600 miles of Asia, from south of the Iranian capital of Tehran to the island-dotted waters of the Pacific Ocean. Millions on the continent scanned the skies or watched TV broadcasts of the spectacular celestial event, while others, much like their ancestors, fretted that the rare darkening of the heavens during daytime might presage an earthly calamity.

CARIBBEAN ISLANDS REBOUND AFTER STORMS—

When Hurricane Luis passed near the tiny Caribbean island of St. Barthelmy last month, it stripped away leaves, flowers and other vegetation, leaving the upscale island looking as barren as if it had been swept by wildfire. Today, as the normally luxuriant tropical foliage quickly returns, St. Barts and other islands of the Caribbean hard hit either by Luis or by Hurricane Marilyn, which followed in its wake, are scrambling to get in shape for the all-important winter tourist season on which their economies depend. All the damaged islands expect to be ready for visitors by Christmas or earlier—although only about 60 percent of tourist lodgings on St. Thomas and St. John in the U.S. Virgin Islands will be up and running for the holidays.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES UPSET BY PARKING CHANGES—

WASHINGTON—Judging from telephone calls, many federal employees are angry, but few are surprised, at reports that Congress and the judicial branch (politicians, federal judges and their horse-holders) are exempt from the House budget plan to charge commercial rates to feds who now get free or subsidized parking. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that nationwide about 200,000 of the nation's 1.6 million nonpostal federal workers enjoy special parking perks. Conclusion: Most feds don't enjoy free or cut-rate parking. Those who may face higher fees probably would be happier if budget cutters would share the misery. Fat chance. This is a do-as-we-say not a do-as-we-do operation.

CONCEALED GUNS INCREASING IN VIRGINIA—

WASHINGTON—As Congress struggles to find ways to control gun violence, across the river in suburban Virginia, people are arming themselves like never before. They not only want to pack pistols, but to conceal them as well. Over the last three months, thousands of gun owners have sought to take advantage of a new state law eliminating most restrictions on carrying concealed weapons. The rush to arms suggests that even as national leaders search for ways to stem handgun violence, the problem is growing worse—with a greater number of Americans arming themselves in self defense.

MUSIC VIA HEADPHONES IMPROVES WORK—

Work going slowly? Feeling in a bad mood at the office? Try putting on a pair of headphones and listening to music. University of Illinois researchers report that doing so can improve both job performance and mood. The study of 256 office workers at a retail firm found that listening to music on stereo headphones soothed frayed nerves, drowned out distracting office chatter, boosted mood and significantly enhanced work performance.

Shoes, art good blend for local store owner

By Melissa Jakubowski
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A Carbondale store is walking the line between shoe store and a showcase for local and student art work, a balance, the owner believes, is her "perfect opportunity."

Kim Treger, an 1985 SIUC fine arts graduate, opened "Walk the Line," a women's shoe and accessories store on September 21 at 703 S. Illinois Avenue.

Treger said the store features a different area artists' work on her store walls every month. She said instead of having traditional paintings or pictures hanging on the wall, she wanted to do something that ties in to her art background and help out the community.

"I wanted to give an alternative place for people to showcase their work," she said. "I remember when I was a student there were only a couple of places that featured local artwork," she said. "I wanted something that I can look at and enjoy while helping the community at the same time."

The store has featured pictures by Ruth Foote, a SIUC graduate in photography from Carbondale, for the past month.

Foote said the store will benefit from the variety of decor and the artists will benefit from the experience.

"As an artist, I appreciate the exposure," she said. "Instead of buying work to hang on the wall she has new artwork every week."

"Anytime you expose your work in a small showing, you are getting practice for bigger venues," she said.

Treger said artists can have their own space to show their work at her store, which she said is an opportunity for public exposure of the artist and her business.

"If people want come in to just see the work that's fine," she said. "Hopefully the artists' friends will come to see the work and find a pair of earrings they really like."

In November, Treger will show the paintings of Laura Reichel, a graduate student in fine arts from Springfield. Reichel said she appreciates the unique setting of the store to show her work.

"Art is shown everywhere," she said. "Art is displayed at the home. Why not in the workplace?"

Reichel said the Carbondale community has always supported local art, but artists are constantly looking for different venues.

Bus system closes for fall break

By Alan Schnepf
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Some people may find themselves doing a little more walking Saturday morning when the Saluki Express bus system shuts down for fall break.

Friday night's late route will run as scheduled ending at 2:30 a.m. After that, no buses will run until Thursday, Nov. 2 at 7:30 a.m.

Jeffrey Duke, assistant administrator for the mass transit system, said the University's contract with Beck Bus Service calls for the shutdown of the service whenever the University is closed.

Duke said the contract was made this way to prevent using funds for a community service.

"Our first priority is the students," he said. "We can't use student funds for a community service."

Duke said that local businesses, such as the University Mall, could buy service from Beck with their own money, but there are no plans to do this over fall break.

If any business decided to contract Beck to keep the buses running during a University closure, Duke said it would be done on a single route basis.

He said business-bought service is still a possibility for other University closures such as Christmas break.

Wind Ensemble will tell musical story to audience

By James Lyon
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the lights dim in a concert hall, the musicians raise their instruments to play, with the goal of telling a story to the audience with their music, hoping that some kind of emotion will be felt by all.

Tonight in Shryock Auditorium the SIUC University Wind Ensemble will present a concert featuring a broad range of music, from inspirational to a new twist on some of the classics.

The University Wind Ensemble consists of about 50 members, made up of woodwind, brass and percussion players.

"Many people are confused about the term 'wind ensemble,'" Michael Hanes, SIUC's director of bands, said. "They think that it has nothing but woodwinds when, in fact, we have a variety of musicians playing different types of instruments."

Tonight's concert features a variety of musical scores including "A Movement for Rosa," written by Mark Camphouse. The work is a tribute to Rosa Parks, one of the most famous people in the civil rights movement. The music attempts to tell the story of her life.

"The beginning of the piece takes on a very quiet, simple style, reflecting her simple life in Alabama," Hanes said. "As it moves on, the piece picks up towards the middle, representing a more dramatic, agitated feel to it as the tension from the civil rights movement begins."

"As it approaches the end, the music attempts to tell the story of how it starts with a single individual's action and then explodes into the entire movement toward civil rights as the music begins to become extremely dramatic."

Other pieces in the concert are

"We wanted to make sure that the audience is entertained and that they become positively active in the music."

Michael Hanes
SIUC director of bands

hidden throughout the music, Hanes said.

"Amazing Grace," composed by Frank Ticheli, stays loyal to the music and the tunes even though it is written for different instrument, Hanes said.

Other works being played are "Vadres," a Norwegian march by Johannes Hanesen and arranged by Glen C. Bainum, and "The Klaxon March," which is an American march by Henry Fillmore.

"We are a band, so we had to throw a couple of marches in there just to be true to the term," Hanes said.

The concert will close with "Renaissance Fair," by Bob Margolis, and "Year of the Dragon," by Philip Sparke.

"Renaissance Fair" was written when there was no such thing as a band," Hanes said. "What Margolis did was to write this and try to make the instruments sound like the music from that particular time period."

"Year of the Dragon" is a challenging piece that, according to Hanes, is very technically challenging for the musicians.

"Year of the Dragon" is a very emotional piece that accompanies a wide range of styles," Hanes said. "We wanted to make sure that the audience is entertained and that they become positively active in the music. We wanted to make sure that everyone felt something from the music."

The University Wind Ensemble plays at 8 p.m. tonight at Shryock Auditorium. Admission is $3 for general public and $2 for students. Tickets can be purchased at the Student Center Ticket Office or at the door.

Outrageous police visitations insulting

IMAGINE IT IS FRIDAY AFTERNOON, AND YOU have just gotten home from a long day of classes. You may have just taken one of the toughest tests of your collegiate career, for which you studied for at least a week. Or maybe you just turned in a 10-page paper on the meaning of life. The point is you have worked hard, and now you feel like having some fun. Assuming you are at least 21, and a drinker, you pop open a beer and start calling your friends to make plans for the evening. Just as you start to relax, there is a knock at the door. It's a police officer. Just the person you wanted to see. He reminds you that you received a citation for litter after a party you had a month ago, and warns you not to have any more parties because the police will be cracking down on partyers as part of their campaign to clean up the party image of Carbondale.

Outrageous, you say? We agree. You say you feel like you are being harassed? We think you may be right. Yet this is exactly the experience many SIUC students went through a few Fridays ago, coincidentally at the beginning of Family Weekend. The Carbondale Police Department, recognizing keggars for the danger to the public welfare that they are, spent valuable man-hours going door-to-door to inform past party violators that they were being watched. Some residents received more than one visit in a day, and some say they have been visited repeatedly over a period of several weeks. All of these visits have been during the morning or afternoon, times during which there were no parties going on.

POLICE JUSTIFY THE VISITS BY POINTING OUT that the residents receiving the warnings have been previously cited for city ordinance violations related to parties. Their addresses are recorded in a "party log," and these are the houses being visited. And police say they are just informing the residents about the various city ordinances residents could be fined under and that they will be watching. Some Carbondale citizens may ask, then, what is the problem with these warnings?

Simple. The appropriate time to issue a warning is when it becomes apparent that violations may occur. In this case, the appropriate time of contact would be when a party is actually observed in progress, before it gets out of hand. Assuming that a person will continue to violate laws simply because they have in the past violates a basic principle this country was founded on: A person is innocent until proven guilty. Informing people of the anti-partying ordinances can be and is accomplished by various pamphlets distributed by the city and the Undergraduate Student Government, and by verbal warnings when police see a potential problem. Besides, if these people have been cited for violations in the past, they should already know what the laws are. Bothering people at home when they are doing nothing wrong to "inform" them again is overkill.

THE RESIDENTS IN QUESTION ARE COLLEGE students. That means that they have more important things to worry about than partying. They have tests, papers, training and grades to worry about. Some of them choose to blow off steam by drinking some beer and socializing. This does not make them dangerous criminals, deserving of these constant visitations and unprovoked warnings by the police. Treating them as such is an insult to each individual visited in such a manner and degrades students in general.

Stealing ruins a Homecoming

"Homecoming" is supposed to be a happy moment to welcome back former SIUC graduates or alumnus, and a tradition for them to get reacquainted or do some catching up on lost times.

But for one Chinese restaurant in Carbondale, this joyous occasion was turned to disappointment and anger. Why? The reason is simple. A group of about 20 fraternity/sorority couples, well-attired, had come to dine at this Chinese restaurant. And can you guess what had taken place after the night was over? Some of these fraternity/sorority members had taken home with them some drink mugs that belonged to the restaurant. This is what I would call- stealing! This is not good and completely misrepresents the true meaning behind the honesty, integrity, and intelligence of these individuals.

To make matters worse, we have proofs to show that some of these fraternity/sorority members were the ones who had committed the above crime because all the other drinks' mugs form the other tables had already been returned to the bar and these fraternity/sorority members had ordered quite a number of drinks from the bar and were the last ones to leave the restaurant.

I feel ashamed too at their behavior because I am also a fraternity member of one of these organizations on campus, and I had recognized some of these members that Homecoming night at the restaurant. The only refuge I can say now is that I am a member of a professional fraternity and it is an organization that teaches me to excel in my school work, extracurricular activities and it does not teach me to be steal and be a criminal. As for these regular fraternity/ sorority members, I only have one thing to say to you; You are a disgrace to your fellow brothers and sisters of your organization and a disgrace to yourselves as well!

U.S. Constitution was ignored

Matthew F. Hale stated in his Oct. 16 letter that the United States should celebrate its conquest of Native Americans. I would like to discuss the manner in which this "conquest" was done.

The way that Mr. Hale discusses our history leaves the impression that the United States openly declared war on the Native Americans and then defeated them. This is at best a half truth. A look into history will show that the United States approached Native Americans and asked to sign legally binding treaties with them, stating at one point that "all land west of the Mississippi would belong to Indians." We would then break the treaties and take everything we had just said belonged to them. In some instances this was done by episodes of shameful force, such as the Sand Creek and Wounded Knee massacres. Mr. Hale, if you seriously believe that making a legal agreement with someone, followed by breaking it and then murdering the party is a way to defeat someone with "superior" intelligence and weaponry," and become a "great nation," I advise you to study your ethics.

Regretting a past mistake of a nation does not entail "giving away all you own." The United States was founded upon the noble and yet obvious principle that all people are created equal. Unfortunately history shows that the U.S. government failed to read the Constitution or ignored it in their treatment of other non-European races. The least we as a nation can do to make up for our past mistakes is not continue the same ones as today. Yet Congress is considering to violate another aspect of the treaties signed with Native Americans, or the funding sent to reservations. We continue to disrespect Native American heritage and religion mocking their sacred religious symbols and ceremonies with sporting team mascots. We need to separate ourselves from our past mistakes as a nation and stop this type of racism. Realizing racism is the first step.

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Million Man March reaction represents life's complexity

By Geneva Overholser
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—It's never been clearer that we are a nation of people experiencing life in very different ways. And the mix has never been more striking—or livelier—than it was last week in Washington.

Phone calls to this office about the Million Man March were a piece of the evidence. More than 50 people called on the day of the march and the two days after, and the only thing they had in common was passion.

The 32 calls the day after concerning coverage of the march itself were overwhelmingly from people who felt that The Washington Post portrayed an extraordinarily positive event too negatively.

The objections covered the lot—that there was too much about Louis Farrakhan when the event was much broader, that Farrakhan's speech was better than portrayed, that the crowd estimates were low, that the wrong language was used. One caller took offense at a reference to attendees as "a range of chocolate hues never found in a box of Crayolas."

More than a dozen callers argued that Farrakhan's speech was positive and practical, while coverage was negative and concentrated sneeringly on such oddities as its flights into numerology.

"I think you're allowing your opinion of the man to interfere with his message," said one caller from Maryland. "It was the eight-point redemption part which was very inspiring, very logically developed, very good. It seemed as if you belitled what was said."

"I didn't hear anyone complain about the length of this speech," said another caller. "You could think from the paper that Farrakhan was out on the stage spewing anti-white rhetoric, and this was not so. I saw people with tears in their eyes. Besides, The Post made it seem a Farrakhan event and it was bigger than that."

Readers also found some of the language objectionable—the word "throng," for example. "It's almost like saying a mob," said one caller, "and this was a very positive and exciting event." Others cited the headline, "Black Men Jam Mall for a Day of Atonement," saying the word "jam" was inappropriate.

But "jam" might have appealed to another group of callers, focused on the crowd estimate. U.S. Park Police, the newspaper explained, say they relied as usual on aerial photographs overlaid with a grid system. They estimated the crowd at 400,000. Organizers said: No way, the count was at least 1.5 million. Angry callers agreed, saying they could see for themselves it was at least 2 million, the police were racist.

One reader took matters in his own hands—or feet. He went out at lunchtime and paced off the area the march occupied and calculated how many "4 foot 7 inch, 160-pound upstanding males" there could have been. The answer: "329 wide by 1,970 deep equals 648,130."

A very different side of the debate emerged two days after the march. "I'm just appalled at the coverage The Post is giving to this Farrakhan thing," said one man.

"Today's paper is full of Farrakhan. He is the lead story, and it says he is trying to get a national role. Well, he wouldn't get it if The Post and other papers—they are the ones who are making him into a national figure." Said another: "People get tired of having this hate-monger glorified. This guy is trouble. He's no Martin Luther King Jr."

How do you explain such divergent responses to the same event, the same coverage? As it happened, earlier in the week at a gathering of black newspaper columnists a particularly thoughtful man speculated on just this kind of issue. Lewis W. Diuguid, an associate editor and columnist at the Kansas City Star, spoke of how reporters cover an event based inevitably on their own experience.

"This isn't about bad reporting. It's about taking down the things that make sense to you, using the quotes that slap you in the face. If journalists realize that this is the landscape that we're working with, this can allow them to know it's just normal human conditions and we can go beyond what's obvious and get more toward the truth of the experience of other people."

Reporting on the Million Man March came through more lenses than reporting 20 years ago ever would have. Even so, there were divergent reactions aplenty. Maybe that's for two reasons. One is Lewis Diuguid's theory about how journalists' lives inevitably influence their work. Another is its corollary: It's true for readers too. Your own pain, conviction, sense of hope or of injustice is the lens you call through—and wear when you call the ombudsman.

breach congressional hostility toward the United Nations.

If that situation remains unchanged, it would be devastating for the U.N.'s ability to function effectively. But it also could deal a damaging blow to the credibility of U.S. claims to leadership in world affairs.

Clinton's speech contained no grand vision. Instead he emphasized what many diplomats here say privately was a narrow and parochial call for combating terrorists and drug traffickers such as the Cali cartel. The diplomats said he appeared to be appealing to domestic concerns and trying to avoid too close an identification with the United Nations at a time when its reputation has been tarnished by the perception that it bungled its peacekeeping missions in Somalia and Bosnia.

However, several diplomatic sources, who asked not to be identified, said that was a mistake. For all the United Nations' shortcomings, they noted, other governments want to see the organization survive, and they do not believe that is possible without continued moral and financial backing from its richest and most powerful member. Clinton's ability to make good on America's U.N. obligations is being watched by other countries as a test of whether he can be counted on to deter the United States from sliding into isolationism and exert strong leadership in future international crises, the sources said.

Other leaders, in their speeches, mainly ignored Clinton's remarks. No one offered even a perfunctory second to his call to arms against the Cali cartel.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin praised the U.S.-Russian relationship during a Monday meeting with Clinton. But in his U.N. speech, Yeltsin strenuously opposed U.S. proposals to give NATO the lead role in policing a hoped-for Bosnia peace agreement and to confer NATO membership on East European countries.

Similarly, Chinese President Jiang Zemin, who met with Clinton today, used his U.N. speech to give Washington a thinly disguised warning not to use "freedom, democracy and human rights" as excuses to interfere in China's internal affairs. Third World countries reserved their biggest applause for Cuban President Fidel Castro, who the United States the U.N.'s 50th anniversary.

Castro spoke Sunday to international political leaders who gathered in New York, criticizing the United Nations' lack of organization and the U.S. as one of four countries involved in a "abuse of authority."

Garnier said he does not sympathize with what Castro has done to Cuba, but there is an advantage to looking him eyeball to eyeball.

"It is always better to include him in organizations where we can watch him," he said.

One motive for President Bill Clinton to allow Castro entrance to the U.S. is probably that the president wants to establish some sort of relations with Cuba after Castro is no longer in power, Garnier said.

Sen. Jessie Helms, R-N.C., is spearheading a bill against Cuba which would strengthen a U.S. trade embargo that has been in place for almost three decades. Garnier said the Helms issue is the crux of the whole U.S./Cuban impasse over the 35 years.

"The Helms mentality represents the basis for us shooting ourselves in the foot," he said. "In his eyes, we have guys in black hats and guys in white hats, but no one is wearing gray hats. There is no one in between."

"We're talking about smaller changes in each department and college," Sherman said. "We're talking about buying a new computer or hiring a professor and things that might not make it all the way to the president's committee."

Sherman said he is not certain what the outcome will be, but he thinks a fair request has been made for SIUC students.

"If you really look at it, it's our money," he said. "We're like consumers purchasing a product, and we should have a certain level of say in what that product will be."

has treated like a nonperson here. "Even such close U.S. allies as Britain and France were sharply critical of Washington's failure to pay its U.N. bills."

One area where Clinton won support from leaders of other industrial nations was in his call for trimming the size of the U.N.'s bureaucracy, reducing waste and adopting a less ambitious list of priorities.

But these are not the kind of reforms envisioned by the poor countries. They want a greater share of authority within the system, particularly on the Security Council, whose five permanent, veto-wielding members—the United States, Russia, Britain, France and China—have the power to control most of the U.N.'s political decisions.

There is a general sense that

Japan and Germany, the two biggest U.N. financial contributors after the United States, should be given permanent council seats. But the developing countries will not agree unless permanent seats also are given to representatives of Africa, Latin America and South Asia. Progress toward expanding the council has been stymied by disagreements about which countries should get the new seats, whether they should have veto powers and how many can be added without making the council too unwieldy.

Ito defends televising of O.J. trial

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—Superior Court Judge Lance A. Ito gave what is believed to be his first interview since the end of the O.J. Simpson murder trial to a college journalism student, and he defended his decision to allow Simpson's trial to be televised.

In a five-minute segment videotaped Friday at the downtown Criminal Courts Building, Ito told California State University, Northridge, senior Gayle Gomer that the public benefited from viewing the trial on television.

"My gut reaction ... is that the American public got to see for themselves, every day, all day, how this trial progressed ... and the American public was able to make up their own mind whether or not this verdict was a just verdict or not," Ito said.

"So I think there's a lot of value in the public being able to see how the judicial system works," he added, explaining that cameras remove the "filtering effect" of reporters' biases and opinions.

Ito would only answer three questions from Gomer. Responding to Gomer's first two questions, he discussed the impact of courtroom cameras. For her final question, Gomer asked Ito if he thought the Simpson verdict would have been different if the trial had not been televised.

active in the community. Kathie Lorentz, coordinator of Student Development, said.

"Volunteers find that it very satisfying to help people and really get involved with the community," she said.

The corps was founded in 1989 after an Illinois mandate was issued requiring all public educational institutions to create a student volunteer program.

In the last year the corps has increased from 2,000 to 3,000 volunteers, 500 of which joined this semester.

Though the students volunteer their time without material award, Lorentz said there is much that can be gained from the program.

If a volunteer completes 30 hours of service a year, a one hour non-academic credit will be awarded to their transcript. Lorentz said though the credit does not go toward a volunteer's academic career, it can help them after college.

"Most employees want to know what students did outside of the required college curriculum," she said. "They like to see what students did that they didn't have to do."

Many of the projects are solely the creation of the corps. But the corps also does volunteer work through other agencies, Shelby Hoover, graduate assistant in Student Development said.

Tonya Kalafut, recreation coordinator for the Carbondale Park District said the corps has helped on many occasions with city projects including hayrides, Easter egg hunts and other community projects.

"Without their help, the events they have been involved in would not have went so smoothly," she said. "They are a great bunch of people to work with."

Hoover said besides the 20 ongoing projects, the corps has a busy fall planned.

The corps will be involved in more than 15 projects including the K's Merchandise food drive, the Lewis School PTA Carnival, WSU/FM record sale and the Book For Every Home For Children at Head Start program.

"We try to help with every event we can help with," Hoover said.

"There are not as many outlets because Carbondale is not a big city," she said. "But if you are looking to show your work there are places."

Treger said she worked at a shoe store in Chicago and fell in love with the business. After spending eight years in retail, Treger said she wanted to open her own store.

Treger decided to come back to Carbondale after her husband, Kevin Koran, received a job with the University. She said it was a perfect opportunity to try out her own business.

"Carbondale is the center of the universe to me," she said. "I own a home and my own store. I never could afford this opportunity in another town."

Treger also sells hats designed and made by local resident and stylist Jenny Eustis. Eustis said she is glad that local businesses support area artists.

"It shows the artistic side of Carbondale—side people normally don't see."

Economic woes keep Ukraine in the dark

Cost of electricity may make winter colder for citizens

The Washington Post

KIEV, Ukraine—When it's October in Ukraine, the forests turn from gold to bare, the winds begin to cut — and back in Soviet days, the heat used to come on.

Nighttime temperatures have dipped below freezing, but there is no heat in Ukraine's cities this month; the government is hoping to keep it off until mid-November. Ukraine is hunkering down for its second winter of tough economic reforms and too little money to keep the country heated and lighted.

Kiev residents bundle up in chilly apartments and step carefully through the blackness of unlighted streets. Officials have warned that this winter will bring at least as many blackouts as last, when, in a daily game of power roulette, Ukrainian engineers cut off whole towns and cities for hours each day to try to spread the available power nationwide and prevent a system crash.

"Our energy complex is like a house of cards. If one piece falls, it could all go down."

Igor Koblok press officer,
Ukrainian Energy
Ministry

Ordinary Ukrainians, who have seen their utility rates soar this year, worry about how they will pay for the little heat and light available. Communist and socialist politicians opposed to reformist President Leonid Kuchma have played to public anxiety over energy, and the government is trying to avoid political upheaval over the shortages.

The issue also is being exploited by those opposed to shutting down the accident-damaged Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which produces about 5 percent of Ukraine's electricity.

When it was part of the Soviet Union, Ukraine for decades burned and wasted huge amounts of cheap oil and gas from Russia and Turkmenistan.

Since 1990, Ukraine has slashed its energy use by one-third, but still spends more for energy overall since ex-Soviet suppliers started charging world-market prices.

Ukraine is perilously dependent on imported oil, gas and coal, and thus has huge tanks to store reserves. They are now empty.

"Our situation is like in Arthur Hailey's novel 'Overload,' about a huge blackout in California," said Igor Koblok, press officer for the Energy Ministry. "We are untappily close to that. Our energy complex is like a house of cards. If one piece falls, it could all go down."

The government has shocked Ukrainians this year by passing on the real costs of energy. A year ago, Ukraine still offered Soviet-style mass subsidies that let residents pay only 5 percent to 8 percent of the real cost of electricity, according to a World Bank estimate. But bills that once totaled a few cents a month have ballooned, eight times for city dwellers and 16 times for farmers and villagers, who were more heavily subsidized.

For many, the bills are unpayable. "Our rent and utility bills are 4 million karbovantsi," said Irina Vladov, 45, a housewife shopping at one of Kiev's main markets this week. That amount, about $24, is a typical monthly salary. "If we pay it, what shall we do for food? The government will not force us to pay it in the end. There will have to be some change."

Cuts to budget cause IRS to ax proposed audit

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The Internal Revenue Service is abandoning, at least for the time being, its plan to audit about 153,000 taxpayers in excruciating detail to see how many of them are cheating.

The audits, covering individuals, partnerships and corporations, had been scheduled to begin two weeks ago, but because of looming budget cuts, the agency already had deferred them until December.

Now, with its appropriation for tax law enforcement likely to be cut by nearly half a billion dollars, the IRS indicated this week it cannot afford the audits, even though they are "the best vehicle for determining patterns of taxpayer compliance with the tax law," the agency said. Therefore, it is postponing them "indefinitely," it said.

The examinations are known inside the agency and among tax experts as "taxpayer compliance measurement program," or TCMP, audits.

Among taxpayers, they have been dubbed "the audits from hell."

Under the program, returns are selected whether or not they are suspected to be fraudulent. The agency picks a diverse group of returns, with a variety of levels and types of income and expenses.

Examiners go over the returns with a fine-tooth comb, usually at the taxpayer's home or office.

Taxpayers are required to account for every penny of their income and to justify all their deductions — every line on the return — backing everything up with receipts and records.

The program provides the IRS with information about common errors and misinterpretations of rules and forms, as well as about deliberate cheating. The agency uses the findings to help determine where to look for unreported income and improper deductions in other returns.

The audits are quite burdensome, and congressional Republicans earlier this year accused the IRS of using them to harass taxpayers. However, other tax experts said the decision to abandon the audits is regrettable because they save the government money.

Mexico, U.S. join forces in war on narcotics trade

Los Angeles Times

MEXICO CITY—U.S. Defense Secretary William J. Perry ended an official visit to Mexico Tuesday, declaring that the two nations have begun a new strategic relationship likely to produce increased military cooperation in combating the multi-billion-dollar cross-border narcotics trade, illegal immigration and the effects of natural disasters.

In speeches and informal discussions during the two-day visit, Perry and his aides described "a new era of friendship" between Mexico's traditionally nationalist and isolationist armed forces and their powerful neighbor to the north.

"They cast it as a natural evolution — the next step after the signing of the North American Free Trade Agreement in 1993 and the White House summit earlier this month, in which President Clinton and President Ernesto Zedillo cemented closer economic and political ties."

At the end of the first-ever official trip by a U.S. secretary of defense to Mexico, which included a private breakfast Tuesday between Perry and Zedillo, many U.S. and Mexican analysts said the emerging strategic ties between two armies long suspicious of each other border on the revolutionary.

At a cocktail party at the U.S. ambassador's residence Monday night, for example, uniformed Mexican generals — including military chief Gen. Enrique Cervantes Aguirre — hobnobbed with their U.S. counterparts during one of their first joint social engagements ever held. Several guests called the event "historic."

"The ideas and proposals being discussed today in our hemisphere would have been unthinkable even 10 years ago," Perry declared, using the party to toast "a new U.S.-Mexican security relationship based on openness, trust and cooperation."

Perry said his meetings with

William J. Perry
U.S. defense secretary

Cervantes and other Mexican military leaders "set the stage for our nations to do more in the security area, and at both higher and deeper levels — more defense and military contacts and dialogue; more officer exchanges; more cooperation on disaster relief, and more openness and sharing of information, such as in the areas of our counternarcotics and border operations."

During a speech to 100 Mexican military officers here on Monday, the secretary indicated that the bilateral relationship may well include more aggressive joint counter-narcotics operations and the supply of sophisticated U.S. military hardware to Mexico for its battle against the drug cartels.

Mexico has requested from the Pentagon a $70 million package of high-technology military equipment, including advanced satellite radar systems capable of tracking aircraft smuggling South American cocaine through Mexico into the United States.

"Looking beyond our counternarcotics work, we have opportunities for cooperation in equipment modernization," Perry said. "Some programs already have begun, but we must jointly examine new areas where we can work together."

U.S. senators who back drilling in Alaska strike paydirt with PACs

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Senators who support oil and gas drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in northern Alaska get much more money on average from oil and gas interests than those who oppose it, according to a study released Tuesday by a number of environmental and public interest groups.

Both the House and Senate versions of balanced-budget legislation, which each chamber is to vote on this week, include provisions that would open the coastal plain of the wildlife area to oil and gas exploration.

Some House and Senate Republicans are threatening to oppose the measures if the provisions are not removed, and President Clinton has said he will veto the legislation if the language remains.

The study found that senators who voted earlier this year to allow drilling in the refuge had received an average of $77,929 since January 1989 from 54 political action committees (PACs), that belong to the American Petroleum Institute and the California Independent Oil Producers.

Senators who voted the other way got an average of $18,356.

The study was conducted by the Sierra Club, the Northern Alaska Environmental Center, Public Citizen and U.S. Public Research Group.

Leading the effort to open the Arctic Refuge to oil drilling are Alaska Sens. Frank Murkowski and Ted Stevens, both Republicans. Since 1989, they have received $122,835 and $90,425 respectively from oil and gas related PACs.

The top two money-getters are a Republican and a Democrat from oil states. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Tex., who led the list with $206,549, has been in Congress only since 1993.

Second was Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., with $189,000. Johnston had been chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development when his party controlled the Senate.

Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla., got no money from the energy interests in the period studied even though he voted for drilling in the refuge. Mack opposes oil drilling off the Florida coast.

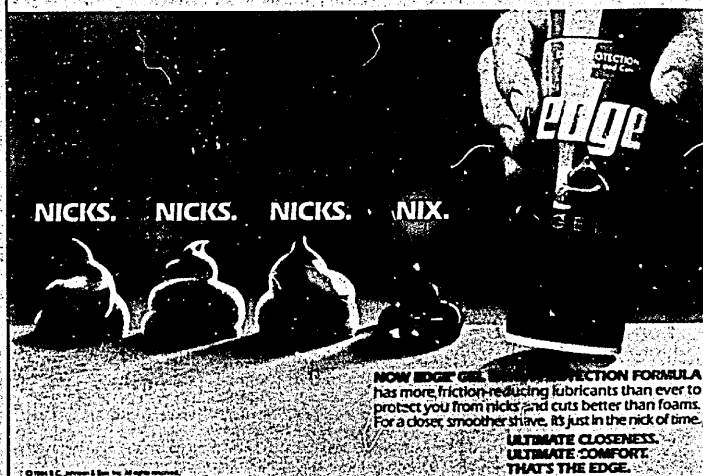

Among senators who voted against drilling in the refuge, the one who got the most from the PACs was Sen. John D. "Jay" Rockefeller IV, D-W.Va., a member of the Senate Finance Committee. Rockefeller, who got $53,940, is the great-grandson of John D. Rockefeller, the founder of Standard Oil.

Clinton aide acknowledges errors in firing of travel office employees

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—A former presidential aide acknowledged to Congress Tuesday that the White House made serious mistakes in its dismissal of seven travel office employees two years ago and later tried to take "corrective" action by offering most of them other government jobs.

The acknowledgement by John Podesta, former White House staff secretary, and other testimony Tuesday reignited debate over the May 1993 firings. It also led to charges that Republicans were using the hearing simply to embarrass President Clinton over an early administration fiasco, in which the employees were abruptly dismissed after complaints of mismanagement and possible wrongdoing were leveled by friends of Clinton.

Rep. William F. Clinger Jr., R-Pa., chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, charged that Podesta's internal investigation should have highlighted conflicts of interest by presidential associates.

Clinger said "rumors and allegations that led to the firings" were inspired by Hollywood producer Harry Thomason, a close friend of Clinton, and by Catherine Cornelius, a distant cousin of Clinton's who handled some presidential campaign travel.

While Thomason was complaining to White House officials that travel office employees were failing to seek competitive bids in arranging charter flights for the press corps, Thomason himself was seeking a non-competitive government aviation contract for his business partner, according to Clinger.

Clinger said it was "blatant" that Thomason spoke to the president about obtaining that contract from the General Services Administration. The contract, to review all non-military government aircraft, got shelved in the aftermath of the travel office controversy, he said.

Podesta, now a professor at Georgetown University Law Center, denied that Thomason had any personal financial motives in pushing for a shakeup in the travel office. Washington attorney Robert S. Bennett, who represents Thomason, added that Clinger's charge was "a lie and an outrage."

The committee disclosed a memo indicating that Thomason presented the president with a $270,000 proposal in February 1993 to review federal civilian aircraft. The work would have been done by a company called TRM, in which Thomason and businessman Darrell Marcens held an interest. Clinton appended a note to the memo telling his aides, "These guys are sharp."

Podesta, while defending Thomason's conduct, said his review did find "that the White House was insensitive to the appearance of favoritism" with respect to Thomason and Cornelius.

Democrats on the committee accused Clinger of using the hearing for partisan purposes, particularly when he refused to permit them to ask questions about alleged irregularities in the White House travel offices under former Presidents Reagan and Bush.

Clinger said such questions went "beyond the scope of the investigation," and that the panel's witnesses "were not conversant" with those matters.

California Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., told Clinger, "The scope of the investigation is deliberately being designed to embarrass the president."

Another committee witness, Michael E. Shaheen Jr., chief of the Justice Department's office of professional responsibility, testified that his own investigation into the May 1993 firings concluded that Clinton's aides had taken "ill-advised and erroneous actions."

Shaheen had been asked by Attorney General Janet Reno to determine if the FBI had submitted to White House pressure to announce it was conducting a criminal investigation of travel office workers—an announcement that would have given the dismissals some justification.

William Kenney, then White House associate counsel, did contact the FBI about allegations from Thomason and others that funds might have been misused, Shaheen said. But FBI officials were not guilty of any infractions, Shaheen said.

More than a year later—in December 1994—the FBI's scrutiny of travel office records led to charges of embezzlement against office manager Billy R. Dale, one of those fired. Dale is accused of stealing thousands of dollars in previous administrations and is scheduled to go to trial Thursday in federal court here.

Couple charged with abandoning 78-year-old aunt

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—A couple are scheduled to be arraigned Tuesday on charges that they abandoned an enfeebled 78-year-old relative in a gang-infested park, authorities said.

Mercedes Sepulveda, 41, and Leonel Rendon, 47, of North Hollywood left Sepulveda's aunt in Sun Valley Park, holding bags of her belongings, on Aug. 27, said Tod Goldstein, a spokesman for the Los Angeles city attorney's office, which is prosecuting the case.

The aunt suffers from Parkinson's disease and asthma and when officers found her in the San Fernando Valley park, 36 hours after she had been left there, she could not remember her name, Goldstein said.

She was taken to a convalescent hospital, where she now lives, Goldstein said.

A notorious gang hangout, Sun Valley Park has been the site of two killings in the past two years—one earlier this month—and numerous shootings, Goldstein said. "The vision that is conjured up here—of this woman being ushered into this park with her several sacks—is quite pitiful," he said.

Goldstein said Sepulveda told police that she had cared for the aunt for 20 years, but "it became too much of a burden," financially and emotionally.

Sepulveda and Rendon—who moved into the woman's residence two years ago—each face one charge of elder abuse and endangerment. If convicted, they could be sentenced to a maximum of a year in prison and fined up to $1,000.

Congress: No nukes

Budget conferees reject proposal for temporary dump.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—In a setback for the nuclear utility industry, House and Senate budget negotiators Tuesday rejected an attempt to end years of delays and designate a site in Nevada as a temporary disposal site for spent fuel rods and other wastes accumulated at reactor facilities around the nation.

Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who offered the proposal at a conference to resolve differences over the 1996 energy and water appropriations bill, lambasted the action. "It's the same song. Every year we put it off, off, off," he said.

But Sen. Harry M. Reid, D-Nev., charged that Johnston's proposal was "utility driven" and unfair, and his case was buttressed by administration opposition to selection of an interim storage site pending further "scientific analysis."

Since Congress passed a law in 1982 aimed at facing up to the disposal problem, nuclear utilities have been paying into a fund to finance a solution. But so far there have been few visible results other than a mile-deep hole in Yucca Mountain, Nev., where engineers are assessing the possibility of using caves deep underground to handle the wastes for centuries to come.

The delays in settling on a permanent site have increased pressures to select an interim location where the materials could be stored safely for a few decades.

Under compromise language adopted by the conferees, Nevada could still be designated as such a temporary location if authorizing legislation introduced in the House by Rep. Fred Upton, R-Mich., and approved 30 to 4 by the House Commerce Committee, becomes law.

Upton said Tuesday that his district has two commercial reactors, including one that has to store overflow wastes less than 150 yards from Lake Michigan.

"How long do you give (Nevada) a veto?" asked Upton. His proposal would designate the Nevada nuclear test site to handle the wastes while engineers and scientists continue exploring using adjacent Yucca Mountain for permanent disposal.

But Johnston warned that defeating his proposal Tuesday dooms the idea, because the Upton bill could be filibustered by the Nevada delegation in the Senate, or vetoed.

The conferees Tuesday also scaled back the administration's request for funds to continue the Yucca Mountain site research.

In a highly partisan budget season, this year's $19.3 billion energy and water bill remains a refuge of old-time regional log-rolling, in which party label means little.

Rep. Frank Riggs, R-Cal., joined forces with Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Cal., to lobby for $37.4 million in construction funds as a down-payment on a $1 billion project at the state's Livermore Laboratory. The "National Ignition Facility" will use special techniques to test nuclear weapons without detonating them.

The bill before the conferees would provide $10.6 billion for atomic energy, up by $500 million over 1995.

And the measure, which rejects a Clinton administration proposal to limit Army Corps of Engineer water projects to those with a truly "federal" interest, contains popular harbor and water programs in almost every state.

Braves-Indians World Series protested by Native Americans

By Ken Rosenthal
The Baltimore Sun

CLEVELAND—Hundreds of thousands of black men march on Washington, and an entire nation takes notice.

The Atlanta Braves rally to the tomahawk chop, the Cleveland Indians wear Chief Wahoo on their caps, and hardly anyone cares.

Sorry to interrupt the World Series, but if we're going to end racism, let's end racism.

End it so no group suffers.

End it once and for all.

Oh, no one wants to hear this, especially the white majority, especially during baseball's showcase event.

But how can a nation inspired by an event as moving as the Million Man March continue to allow such blatant racism against Native Americans?

The reason is simple.

Native Americans form less than 1 percent of the U.S. population, and in a society where everyone is a victim, they're shouting into the wind.

They gathered outside Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium before the first two games of the World Series, trying to educate the masses.

As usual, they were largely ignored.

The protesters understood—people attend sporting events to escape the world's ills, not confront them. But don't anyone dare say the Native Americans should just drop it.

Would blacks?

Would Jews?

Would any self-respecting minority?

One of the protesters' signs said, "Human beings as mascots is not politically incorrect, it is morally wrong."

And one of their posters depicted pennants of the fictional New York Fighting Jews, Chicago Blacks, San Antonio Latinos, St. Paul Caucasians and San Francisco Orientals—and for a reality check, the good old Washington Redskins.

No, the Braves and the Indians aren't the only guilty parties, not with the Redskins, Chicago Blackhawks and Kansas City Chiefs prowling the professional sports landscape.

Why, Braves fans can't even claim they invented the tomahawk chop—it apparently got its start at Florida State, which is supposedly one of the nation's higher institutions of learning.

It's not the nicknames of the teams that bother the Native Americans so much. It's the logos, the mascots, the perpetuation of myths.

Take Chief Wahoo, the smiling, red-faced caricature beloved by Indians fans. He's Little Red Sambo, when you get right down to it.

Larry Doby, the first black to play in the American League and now an assistant to AL president Gene Budig, cringes at his former team's insensitivity.

"I really don't want to call the Indians anything else, but I agree 100 percent that they should do away with Chief Wahoo," he told the Cleveland Plain Dealer last week. "It reminds me of the black-face minstrel shows."

Then there's the tomahawk chop.

Jane Fonda once did it—Jane Fonda, the anti-war protester turned capitalist queen. Heck, it probably will surface as a biceps exercise in her next workout video.

What's so bad about the chop?

Don't the Braves wear tomahawks on their jerseys? And didn't those Native Americans used to scalp any poor, white soul who crossed their paths?

No, they actually had a nice, little civilization going before we stole their land, slaughtered their children and confined them to reservations.

But let's not that bring up at the Series.

In October, it's fashionable to compare modern players such as Greg Maddux to old-timers such as Walter Johnson, but heaven forbid anyone mention true history.

Such as when the Creeks, Choctaws, Seminoles, Cherokees and Chickasaws—known to U.S. settlers as the Five Civilized Tribes—were driven out of the Southeast and established in an area forever intended to be Indian territory.

Perhaps you've heard of that area.

It's called Oklahoma.

Oh, no one wants to hear this now. No one wants to know. Just take me out to the ballgame, OK?

Take me out to the ballgame, and leave me alone.

That's the attitude the protesters confront, and it's understandable, given that the politically correct movement is often humorless and rather oppressive.

Then again, three white males wearing Indian headdresses stood right in front of the protesters before Game 1, chanting and doing the tomahawk chop.

The television cameras picked up on it immediately—look, Ma, conflict! That's America in the '90s. Grab a beer, act like an idiot, get yourself on TV.

Meanwhile, the speeches continued and the protesters marched, protected by metal barricades and a dozen Atlanta cops who were dressed like paratroopers.

Do the protesters make a difference?

Apparently, the answer is yes. "It's evident by the way they (the fans) dress," said Cleto Montelongo, 48. "Two or three years ago, 95 percent of those people would be wearing the garbage."

He's very dedicated, not in just his training, but also in his lifestyle. He's not a partier, doesn't abuse his body, and is real careful about what he eats and drinks."

"He's one of those guys that if he knows he is running in the morning, he'll get up in the middle of the night to drink a glass of water to make sure his fluid levels are up."

Cornell said this dedication is what separates the good athletes from the great ones.

"To be willing to make sacrifices to do well, that's the difference in top class athletes," he said. "He does everything right."

Although Marneros is an athlete, he said his academics are equally important to him, and being at SIUC is a great accomplishment.

"I try to combine them both (running and academics)," he said. "I am an athlete, but I'm a student also. My greatest achievements are winning the MVC and being here at school. I'm very grateful to coach (Cornell) because he gave me the opportunity to be here, and not many people have the chance for a scholarship."

Marneros said winning the MVC this year would only get him a third of the way to his goal for this season. "I want to go to Nationals," he said. "I've worked very hard this year. Last year I didn't have the experience, but this year I do."

Cornell is doing everything he can to help Marneros with that goal. He has already made hotel arrangements in Ames, Iowa for the NCAA Championships, Nov. 20.

"I wanted to convince Stiefos that he can qualify," he said. "He missed it by one spot last year."

Bench warming QB's take reigns over weekend, win

Los Angeles Times

Lost in the shadows for years, a bench warmer is offered one brief chance at the spotlight.

For Steve Bono, that moment becomes two months of stardom.

Unloved and unwanted, a journeyman is given one more quick chance to impress his team's fans.

For Erik Kramer, that moment becomes two months of cheers.

A team of mostly kids and cast-offs is put under the care of a man who is mostly up-tight.

Two months later, the expansion Jacksonville Jaguars and Tom Coughlin are thinking mostly playoffs.

Teams led by Rich Brooks and Mike White are succeeding.

Teams led by Don Shula, Bill Parcells and Dan Reeves are not.

Vince Evans has as many 300-yard passing games as Dan Marino.

Jim Harbaugh has thrown more touchdown passes than Troy Aikman.

Harvey Williams has rushed for more yards than Marshall Faulk.

And nobody in football has caught as many passes as ... Eric Metcalfe?

Wouldn't you know it? The first year Southern California has been without a professional football team in 50 years, the National Football League has finally gone Hollywood.

At halftime of the 76th NFL season, the show has rarely been better.

There's drama in Kansas City, whose Chiefs have won three times in overtime and once in a snowstorm.

There's action-adventure in Dallas, where, sometimes, the action and adventure even involve the football team.

There's comedy in Arizona with Buddy Ryan, history in Miami with Marino chasing Fran Tarkenton, a wonderful parody of two football teams in New Jersey. And look, a sweet remake is being shown in Buffalo.

The free-agency/salary-cap system is purring in its third year, carrying the Cincinnati Bengals and Atlanta Falcons to the top, pushing the New England Patriots and Pittsburgh Steelers to the brink.

There are no labor problems, an understandable TV package, and players who routinely sign autographs, free.

All of which has set up the wide screen for a first half that has been worth the price of chocolate sprinkles.

Tamarick Vanover of the Chiefs returned a punt 76 yards for an overtime touchdown so dramatic, the winners wept.

Bono ran 76 yards for a touchdown on a bootleg that so badly fooled the Arizona Cardinals, his linemen laughed.

Robert Smith of the Minnesota Vikings completed a 58-yard touchdown run with one shoe, and then said, "I'm going to have to get a sock contract."

encouraging. People are around campus are talking about the squad.

In the past people never talked about the football Salukis and treated the program like a family treats their insane relative — acting as if they don't have one.

Right now the Dawgs sit at 2-2 in the Gateway and 4-4 overall — good enough for third place in the conference.

For those who have short memories let's recap what has happened so far this year.

SIUC started out picked last in the Gateway almost 50 points behind the sixth place squad.

The Salukis promptly opened the season with an upset at then 20th-ranked Southeast Missouri State, 30-27.

The Dawgs suffered a 35-3 setback against Murray State the next week. The Racers have since won the rest of their games and are challenging the top teams in the nation.

Division I-A Arkansas State was SIUC's next opponent, and the Dawgs outplayed the Indians for most of the game before finally succumbing, 14-9.

Saluki head coach Shawn Watson got his first win at McAndrew Stadium the following week when the Dawgs ran over Nicholls State, 48-20.

Then, in what most players call the turning point of the season, SIUC went to Indiana State and got blasted 52-3. The Salukis took the loss personally and went on to get two consecutive home victories.

First was a 14-11 victory over intrastate rival Illinois State, 14-11, and then the Dawgs won a homecoming thriller 33-30 over Southwest Missouri State in overtime.

After a decent performance against Northern Iowa, the Salukis are looking to have their first winning season since 1991 and finish in the top half of the conference.

It's time to congratulate the players, Watson and the rest of the coaching staff for putting a team on the football field that we can be proud of.

Now if only McAndrew Stadium had some better turf.

United States because of the different opportunities in marketing, but she said she misses her family, friends, her culture, and the food back home in Spain.

Murgiondo said she has adjusted well to life in the United States, both as a student and an athlete.

"It was hard at the beginning because I didn't know the language," she said. "Everyone was rushing more here than back home, but my life was always about rushing."

The swimming and diving teams will travel to Spain during the Christmas break to train in Murgiondo's hometown of Ordizia, Spain, where the SIUC swim/diver teams will compete in an international meet.

Murgiondo said she is really looking forward to performing in front of, what will be for her, a home crowd.

"I am looking forward to that big time — after so much work we can show them what we can do," she said.

Cross-country

Cyprus native looks to defend conference title

By Chad Anderson
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Few people get the chance to travel to a foreign nation. Fewer get the opportunity to learn at a university there, and even fewer succeed in intercollegiate athletics during their stays.

These are only a few of the things that junior cross-country runner Stelios Mamerros has done in his young life.

Mamerros, a native of Cyprus, has also traveled to Turkey to run, won the Missouri Valley Conference individual championship, and has been named MVC cross-country "Athlete of the Week" three times. He has been named to the MVC All-Academic team and was named to the Cross-Country Coaches' association All-American team, as well.

Mamerros is currently preparing to lead the Saluki men's cross-country squad into the Missouri Valley Conference Championship on Sunday in Tulsa, Okla. - a race that he won last year.

Being the MVC conference champion last season, Cornell said Mamerros will be the center of attention at the meet this year, but that should not hurt him in the race.

"Obviously, other people will be keying in on him since he was conference champ last year," he said. "I think Stelios handles pressure pretty well. He has enough races behind him to know what to do. It becomes routine."

"Once you've figured out what you have to do to win, you stick by it. Whether it's walking on one side of the street, or wearing the same clothes, it's almost like superstition."

Mamerros said he knows other runners will be watching him, but he said the drive to Tulsa will be the toughest part for him.

"I know it's in here (pointing to his heart), and I have more experience this year," he said. "Last year the meet was here, so that was easier, but this year we have to drive to Tulsa."

Mamerros has run consistent times throughout the season, some have even been personal bests.

Consistency is the reason why SIUC cross-country coach Bill Cornell refers to him as the key man for the team to follow.

"He's pretty steady every week," he said. "He knows how to set the pace and not burn himself out. He's a good yardstick for the other runners to measure themselves by."

The one area Cornell is trying to improve Mamerros in is his frame of mind while running in races.

"In the past, he's run by stopwatch. He needs to forget about the time, and run against the competition," he Cornell said. "It's the stopwatch that makes him a steady runner, but he needs to forget about it and run the race."

One reason for Mamerros' success is his dedication, according to Cornell.

"He is serious about his running and education," Cornell said. "He's over here to learn."

Swimming/Diving

Saluki chasing NCAA Championships

By Jared Driskill
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Saluki senior swimmer Donianzu Murgiondo began her long and distinguished career in swimming in at the age of 9, when her doctor recommended swimming as therapy for a back problem she once had.

In high school, she was named "Swimmer of the Year" in her home country of Spain in 1991.

and 1992, but she thinks a whole lot about swimming at the collegiate level.

That all changed when she got some encouragement from former Saluki swimmer, and fellow countryman, Harri Garmendia.

Garmendia, a four-time All-American at SIUC and member of the 1984 Spanish Olympic team, convinced Murgiondo that she could swim at the college level, and that SIUC was the place to do it.

"He (Garmendia) liked SIUC very much. He told me that I could have a chance to come here and get a scholarship," said Murgiondo. "I came here and started swimming in the Saluki Club, then I got a scholarship and was eligible to swim on the team," she said.

She took Garmendia's advice and came to SIUC, and has accomplished many things in the past three seasons.

Last season, Murgiondo had the team's second-fastest times in the 200 and 500-yard freestyle events and swam her way to a first-place finish in the 500 free at the MVC Championships.

This season, Murgiondo is a Saluki team captain and one of the swimmers women's swim coach Mark Kluepfer will be looking to for leadership and consistency.

Murgiondo said she is honored the team chose her to be a captain. "I am proud of it (being a captain) because my team chose me. Being a captain is like being a channel between the coach and the team — you always have to keep an eye on everyone — make sure everyone is swimming well," said Murgiondo.

"It helps being a senior. I think people look up to you. Some people are new and they don't know which way to head. Being a captain, you can give them direction," she said.

Murgiondo has one major goal she would like to realize during her last season at SIUC.

"I want to finish well — I'm working real hard for it and I would love to go to the NCAA's (championships)," she said.

Murgiondo said the main difference between Spain and the United States is balancing swimming and going to school.

"In Spain, you can't study and swim at the same time. Here you can do both at the same time. Everything is so close — you have the pool and the school together," she said. "Everyone helps you do both together."

"Back home, you don't find the opportunity. There are swim clubs, but your hometown and the university are four hours away."

As a marketing student, Murgiondo plans to continue on into graduate school. She has not decided where she is going yet, but she would like to stay at SIUC.

Dawgs, Watson deserve credit for turnaround

Doug Durso

From the Pressbox

The Northern Iowa game was the caper.

For anybody who still had doubts about the SIUC football team, those doubts should have been erased last Saturday.

Yes, the Salukis lost 13-0 and lost their shot at the Gateway championship, but just think about that statement.

They lost their shot at a Gateway championship.

This is a ball club that lost 10 contests last year. The Dawgs had no business being in the top half of the division let alone challenging for the league's top spot.

If battling for the top spot didn't convince you then the way the Salukis played against the Panthers should.

SIUC went up to the UNI Dome and held the 14th-ranked Panthers to just 13 points.

Northern Iowa has outscored league opponents 95-24, so only allowing 13 points is pretty good for any team. This is also a Panthers team that rarely loses a conference game and almost never loses on at home.
